Overall this is a great plan, nice to see so much emphasis on green space and the environment.

However, where is the secondary school? With all the residential development in the area, and no secondary school in the Macaulay PSP either, where are all the students attending the new primary school supposed to go once they reach year 7?

There seems to be plenty of primary schools being built in inner Melbourne, without the consideration for secondary schools. The local secondary schools that may end up being in this catchment, and in nearby Kensington, are either already at capacity, far from the residents who will actually attend them and/or difficult to actually get to, or will be over capacity once all the kids from the new primary schools reach secondary school age.

Thank you for considering my comment.
